Dedication

Professor Paul L. Selby, Jr. has dedicated a great portion of his life's work to the West Virginia University College of Law. He first came here in 1964, serving from that year until 1972 as dean. His stewardship during that period had a tremendous and continuing impact upon legal education in West Virginia. He remains a vibrant teacher, the Class of 1989 having named him Professor of the Year.

Though Professor Selby has agreed to continue supervising students in the College's Clinical Law Program for the upcoming academic year, he readies for retirement from classroom teaching. One suspects (and hopes), however, that Paul Selby will always be a teacher.

At a recent dinner held in his honor, the College of Law announced the creation of the Paul L. Selby, Jr. Scholarship Fund, a fitting tribute to a man who often helped students fund their legal education out of his own pocket.

It is with pride that the West Virginia Law Review dedicates this issue to him.

PAUL L. SELBY, JR.
